Teaching All Kinds of Minds

Research-based professional development for educators that will change the way you teach.

Join us for an interactive course that provides K-12 educators with in-depth knowledge of how students learn and the ability to identify where learning breakdowns occur. The course focuses on knowledge acquisition of the All Kinds of Minds' philosophy and neurodevelopmental framework. You will develop skills for interpreting student work and selecting appropriate strategies to make students successful learners.

Expert All Kinds of Minds facilitators guide your learning experience to identify strategic links between All Kinds of Minds and innovations already in place at your school.

Participants will be able to:

- Identify the major neurodevelopmental factors that impact academic themes relevant to your teaching responsibilities
- Adapt your instructional approach based upon your own learning profile, the neurodevelopmental demands of the task, and strengths and weaknesses of students
- Communicate about neurodevelopmental strengths and weaknesses with students in understandable and respectful terms
- Use a common language that enhances collaboration with colleagues and students
- Bring activities back to your classroom for immediate use
